Spring and Summer Plants

INDEX—Back Cover

In issuing the 1949 Spring and Summer Plant catalog we again wish to say that our constant endeavor is to offer as complete a list of the better varieties of plants as possible.

Most of the plants have been grown in pots where they have developed good roots. They can be transplanted to the garden with a good start over seedlings or plants grown directly from seed.

Pot Grown Superb Tea Roses

The roses offered in the following list are POT GROWN, well-rooted, strong plants ready to bloom, and may be transplanted into the garden without the slightest setback, instead of waiting for dry, dormant plants to get started, and the chance of failure. They will bloom many weeks before the dormant stock and thereby lengthen our short season.

Chrysanthemums require a good, fairly rich soil for best results; they need additional fertilizing later in the season, about the time buds begin to appear.

While some kinds will winter better than others in our locality, they should be protected with a good covering of leaves or coarse hay in about the same manner as most perennials.

HARDY WATER LILIES

The plants listed under this heading are all of the hardy type, but except for one or two kinds they must be given protection in winter. All hardy lilies are day bloomers, opening early in the morning and closing every afternoon. Most kinds open four or five days in succession and after getting well established should have several blooms each day.
